

Have you ever approached a town and wanted to know immediately whether or not to try to go straight through or take the bypass? Chances are you end up with one hand on the wheel and on the radio's seek button, trying to find the information you so desperately want to know. XM radio has tackled that problem for me. I can pay more attention to the road and make informative decisions based on commercial-free radio. Instead of threatening to take local information away from satellite, how about some grant money to help them expand it? Let's quit thinking backwards and move ahead. How many lives has this technology already saved?
